Mr. Venable also went before the committee with us. I feel confident that our whole delegation will go warmly for the work. The resolutions of the Legislature of North Carolina are of great importance to us. At the close of the interview, Mr. Seymour of New York, the chairman of the Committee, stated that it was little doubtful whether any River and Harbor Bill would be reported at this session; but that in case there should be one, the claims of Wilmington would be favorably considered, and the representations of the delegation have their due influence. From all I can learn, it seems more than Road, brought $8 40 per 100 lbs. likely that a bill will be reported; and perhaps we may get some fifty or sixty thousand dollars; at any rate I hope so, but only hope, for I am not of the sanguine kind that take things for granted.

The Senate had an executive session on Monday, Mr. Badger was not confirmed-the matter will be taken up again on Thursday. His confirmation does not appear probable.

Mills' statue of Jackson is quite a fine work, and will make his fortune, Congress having passed a resolution giving him $20,000 on account of Jackson's statue, and ordered that he construct a collossal statue of Washington, for which he is to receive $50,

There was quite a debate in the Senate to-day upon Gen. Cass' resolutions upon the Monroe doctrine trine. The old General made a speech of considerable length in support of them, and one which struck me as very able. Mr. Butler of South Carolina made a short speech in reply, and Hale of N. Hampshire quite a long one in his usual manner, adroit, amusing and sectional. It was expected that Soule house in Hyde, on Friday night last would have spoken, and the galleries were crowded with ladies, four of whom were very good-looking. and the rest not so by any means.

Oh, that man was ugly-so ugly that the President of the Wilmington and Raleigh Railroad fairly stopped and looked at him-his mouth was a triangle-his nose wasn't at alland his eyes looked like half-boiled onions, bound with red tape, and placed one about a quarter of an inch above the other.

I used to like Monuments-I gave five dollars to the Washington Monument-but I'm done with them forever-perfectly sick of them-never again want to see anything above two-stories in height Yesterday I stopped over in Baltimore for a few hours to look at the City; and Daniel Dickson, Esq., and this deponent walked up to the Monument to Washington there erected. An old man gave us a little lantern, and told us to go on our way rejoicing, up the spiral stair-case in the inside. Our friend marched up manfully until the light began to give out, whereupon he "gin out" also; thinking perhaps that it was not safe for Daniel to go a second time into the lion's den, so, like Alexander Selkirk, I had to "finish my journey alone," which I did with much fear and trembling, and sundry fore bodings of being turned into a monument I should not think, and if it is such work to go up. how can the committee at Washington talk about tion of the tower of Babel, and Congress typefies the confusion of tongues.

In introducing the bill Mr. Taylor made brief but comprehensive and pointed remarks. He said that he had no objection to its reference to the judiciary committee, if that was the desire of the House or of any one portion of it-though it was due to the importance of the bill itself to add that it was a copy verbatim (except as to the time of residence, which was formerly nine months, and which was reduced by this bill to thirty days) of an act in the Revised Statutes of 1830, which was copied from a law of 1817. The same provision is contained in the Revi sed Law of 1801, and was re-enacted in 1813. It was therefore in force for forty years under Governors Geo. Clinton, Morgan Lewis, Dan'l D. Tompkins, De Witt Clinton, Joseph C. Yates, Martin Van Buren, Enos D. Throop, and William L. Marcy, and was repealed in 1841, under William H. Seward .-When the law passed the Senate in 1817, Martin Van Buren was a member of that body, and voted for it. He had no objection, he repeated, to sending the bill to the judiciary committee, trusting that that committee would give it their prompt attention. and report it back to this House, in order that members might have an early opportunity to examine it and to pass upon it by a vote.

The bill was referred to the judiciary committee.
